Decolonizing Anthropology

Museology - Wikipedia
Terminology. The words that are used to describe the study of museums vary depending on language and geography. For example, while "museology" is becoming more prevalent in English, it is most commonly used to refer to the study of museums in French (muséologie), Spanish (museología), German (Museologie), Italian (museologia), and Portuguese ...

Sep 28, 2017 - Decolonizing research is a process of conducting research with Indigenous communities that places Indigenous voices and epistemologies in the center of the research process (Battiste, 2000; Smith, 1999). It critically examines the underlying assumptions that inform the research, and challenges the widely-accepted belief that Western methods and

Decolonizing the Cultural Workplace: A New Organizing
Dec 23, 2021 - Decolonizing is hard work. Nor is there any clear end to it. Ousting the occupier was only the beginning, and, arguably, colonialism’s cultural residue—deeply imprinted through the scorch of racial hierarchy—has been the most difficult to erode. We will be grappling with its ongoing legacy for the

Political ecology | Cambridge Encyclopedia of Anthropology
Political ecology is a critical research field within anthropology and related disciplines that examines how and why economic structures and power relations drive environmental change in an increasingly interconnected world. Initially it was most well-known for investigating the practices and impacts of large-scale resource development projects in subsistence-oriented

Anthropocene | Cambridge Encyclopedia of Anthropology
"The Anthropocene" is a term that is increasingly used to define a new planetary epoch: one in which humans have become the dominant force shaping Earth’s bio-geophysical composition and processes. Although it originated in the Earth Sciences, it has since been widely adopted across academia and the public sphere as a catch-all description for the overwhelming impact of human

James Clifford (historian) - Wikipedia
Clifford’s work has sparked controversy and critical debate in a number of disciplines, such as literature, art history and visual studies, and especially in cultural anthropology. His historical and rhetorical critiques of ethnography contributed to Anthropology's important self-critical, decolonizing period of the 1980s and early 1990s.
